On the morning of August 6, 1945, an atomic bomb was dropped on the city of Hiroshima, Japan. The explosion killed an estimated 140,000 people and caused widespread devastation. In the years that followed, the survivors of the bombing have shared their stories with the world, in an effort to ensure that such a tragedy never happens again.

One such survivor is Rahna Reiko Rizzuto, the author of the book Hiroshima in the Morning. Rizzuto was just two years old when the bomb was dropped, but she has spent her life learning about the bombing and its aftermath. In her book, Rizzuto draws from personal interviews with survivors, diaries, and official documents to paint a vivid and deeply moving portrait of the lives that were lost, the families that were shattered, and the resilience of the people who survived to rebuild their lives.

Hiroshima in the Morning is a powerful and unforgettable account of one of the darkest chapters in human history. Through the eyes of the survivors, Rizzuto tells a story of unimaginable suffering, loss, and hope. Her book is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the full impact of the atomic bomb and its legacy.
