In one of his most inspiring speeches, President Barack Obama addressed graduates at Howard University's 2016 commencement ceremony. His powerful words challenged students to pursue excellence not just for their own personal gain, but as a means of shaping a better future for their communities and the world.

The Pursuit of Excellence

Obama opened his speech by emphasizing the importance of striving for excellence in all aspects of life. He encouraged graduates to set high standards for themselves and to never settle for mediocrity. "Excellence is not a gift," he said. "It's something you have to work for every day. It's not something that just happens. It's something that you have to cultivate."

The pursuit of excellence, Obama explained, is not simply about achieving personal success. It is also about making a meaningful contribution to society.

“When you strive for excellence, you're not just doing it for yourself. You're doing it for the people who came before you and the people who will come after you. You're doing it for your family, your community, and your country.

Barack Obama”

Setting an Example

In addition to pursuing excellence, Obama urged graduates to set an example for others. He spoke about the power of role models and the importance of using one's platform to make a positive difference in the world.

"I want you to be beacons of hope for those who have lost their way," Obama said. "I want you to be sources of inspiration for those who are struggling. I want you to be the change that you wish to see in the world."

Obama challenged graduates to use their education to make a difference in the lives of others. He encouraged them to get involved in their communities, to speak out against injustice, and to work towards creating a more just and equitable world.

“Your education is not just about getting a job. It's about making a difference in the world. It's about using your knowledge and skills to make a positive impact on your community and your country.

Barack Obama”

President Obama's commencement speech was a powerful call to action for graduates to pursue excellence and set an example for others. He challenged them to use their education and their platform to make a positive difference in the world.

His words are a timeless reminder of the importance of striving for excellence, setting an example, and working towards a better future for all.

If you are looking for an inspiring read that will challenge you to reach your full potential and make a positive impact on the world, then I highly recommend reading President Obama's commencement speech.
